NOT NEEDED. On next Friday evening the cit will be called to a hearing for a electric line, the route being between street. After a careful survey of the proposed new line we are led firmly to believe it is uncalled for and can be of no special advantage to this town. Already Arlington has a line to this city by the way of Winchester, and is all that heights it certainly would be of no possible benefit, but, on the contrary, a brought to bear why this road should not have a grant to lay rails on this thoroughfare. In the first place, the another good and sufficient reason is, this thoroughfare will, in the near future, be the main inlet and outlet to reservoir, which has been accepted and is to be made a beautiful park. The main reason why a grant should be refused is that there is no call or demand Enterprise. This much we may say of for it. The Lexington road has and is giving excellent service to patrons in this section, and were the new line to operate the running time to Lexington would be cut to half-hourly instead of quarterly as now. The new line would practically be running in the same territory. Arlington wants her land developed, and is willing to grant franchises to this end, but when another line is asked for to practically cover the same route it is asking too much, and by all means should not be allowed.

Our town is already adequately supplied with electric lines and no more is needed to endanger our citizens' lives. This proposed line is not needed and we feel confident it will not be granted.

TO SCHOOL AGAIN.

To school again is always a welcome call to Arlington. The Enterprise hastens to give its greeting to both teachers and pupils upon their return to their books. Arlington is always a somewhat lonely place with her school houses closed. We always miss the children and the teachers during the long summer vacation, so it is that we are particularly glad at the opening of the fall term of school. We bespeak for Supt. Sutcliffe and his corps of teachers, and for Principal Holt of the High school and his associates, a pleasant and successful year; and we bespeak for the pupils the best that the coming school year can afford them.

Arlington has every reason to be proud of her schools. With an intelligent and progressive school committee, and with teachers that are willing and efficient in their work, there is no good thing that we may not reasonably hope for and of our schools. The patrons of our schools are in a good-natured and receptive condition, while the teachers are constantly planning for and anticipating the best for "bread." interests of the children, so there is no reason why we may not expect the best to be had in all educational slines. Let us constantly keep the public schools of Arlington well to the front.

We are glad, too, that our clergymen have returned to their respective pulpits. We love to see the open door of our churches. Our town, as we have said many times before, is fortunate in its ministry. Our clergymen, distinguished for their ability and culture, as well as for their religious zeal, are men among men. While we enjoy them in help effect those improvements, as well the pulpit, we enjoy them as well upon the streets and in their homes. We are glad they are back again. Indeed, we are glad that all Arlington is substanially home again. Arlington is a good place in which to live. Her people as a whole are interested in each other, so that we have a community of good feeling. Let us all now be up and doing for the further advancement of every interest belonging to this historic town.

TWO MONTHS FROM ARLINGTON. Two months from Arlington have emphasized our previous good opinion of the town. No earthly possession can be estimated at its full value until we have for a time at least been deprived of that possession. "How blessings brighten as they take their flight" is an exclamation replete with suggestive and declared truth. The absent friend is the one we most prize of all. "Lost to sight to memory dear" is the burden of everybody's song. The law of associa tion can only have its highest manifestation as the object around which the fondest associations group themselves is more or less removed. Absurd as it may at first seem, yet it is in harmony with all human nature that separation through time and distance makes closer the bond of endearment. The lover who in the presence of the woman he adores would readily give her ten thousand worlds were they his when widely apart so let the wind whistle through them; the immortal God; thenceforth, what from her. Well, during these two months absence from Arlington we have thought of her more than once. Her many excellent points have with us become underscored during these days off. We now see her home life and her schools and her churches more nearly at their value than heretofore. We appreciate more fully the enterprise of her people and we more fully recognize and appreciate the many attractions of the Woburn and Arlington, via Lowell town. The Enterprise has been first, last and all the time loyal to Arlington, and she will always continue such. In discussing her interests, these columns have attempted to manfully set forth her virtues and her shortcomings when such confession would be likely to stir is called for. To the citizens of the the people to more earnest effort in other lines of action. We may at times have written sharply of the management menace. Various reasons could be of public affairs when it did not seem to us the better way of doing things, still we have at the same time written intelligently and honestly. We are sure that street is far too narrow for a track, and our readers will give us the credit of declaring ourselves upon every question affecting the interests of the town, and we believe they will not hesitate to the Metropolitan park system at the further declare that in no instance have we "beat about the bush." 90 IN THE SHADE.

The above is what the glass registers here at our mountainside home this Monday morning at eleven o'clock, and the mercury is still on the climb. When old Sol gets a firm hold, even these everlasting fastnesses do not cause him to lessen his grip. What a flooding of the beaches this holiday from Boston and its surrounding country! For the past week or more we have had a torrid wave full upon us. While the days have been a good deal unendurable, the nights have been and are simply delicious. Last evening we sat until a late hour on our broad verandah refreshed and invigorated by the cool breezes that came creeping up this long stretch of valley, and which came down these steep mountain sides. And then, added to all this, the softened rays of the September moon lend a dreamy haze to this wide-spreading outlook before us. "If it were not for these disappointments," said a friend to us the other day, "life to us would be a continuous pleasure." "But, dear friend," we replied, "these disappointments, as you term them, are the common heritage of mankind." No one escapes them. They meet us on every side. Go where you will, and even then you cannot rid yourself of them. And the most unfortunate thing about it is that the friend whom you have trusted beyond a doubt is the disappoint you. We have maintained and do now that we should share the very first in near neighborhood to our troubles and misfortunes with others so far as this is possible as well as our joys and good fortunes; that we should let our weaknesses be known to the world as well as our points of strength, if we have any such; that we shouldmake free to tell others of our temptations that we may receive their aid in resisting temptation and that we may aid them in their attempts at self-defeuse. Still the most of us are withholding ourselves from others and so living alone our own individual life. A lady friend who has given no little thought to the discussion of life in its manifold and realistic forms, has sent us recently a marked copy of the Boston Evening Transcript in which "Alice Brown,' has many bright things to say of her subject, "The confidant." With some things that the anthor so well says we are so pleased that we quote her in part. We say amen to the following: "The image of all loneliness is the human soul. She dwells apart on her sad island, absorbed in the pitiful struggle of mortality; and though her sinews toughen under rebuff, the moment Boys' Short Pant Suits. comes when, like tragedy herself, she must open the mouth of pain, and cry stream is changing its course and so aloud not to heaven only but to her sisters in the flesh. "This was the cry of the Jewish captives in Babylon, longing for their beloved city. Yet, much as they loved Jerusalem, they loved the temple more, because it was the dwelling-place of their God. Their enthusiasm was a religious enthusiasm, their zeal a religious zeal. And though our views of religion are much wider and truer than tracks from Woburn to Lexington and theirs, we shall be distinctly inferior to them if we have no love for God's house, no zeal in his service. We have learned that neither in Jerusalem nor in Samaria nor anywhere else is there an exclusive worshipped anywhere-in cathedral or cabia, in the wilderness or by the sea. The psalmist was right when he said He filleth immensity with his not. presence. Yet we need as deeply as did the Jew the sense of the reality of God's presence. To the Jew, the temple supplied this want. It gave God a local habitation and a name. The Installation.

The day on which I was installed in my present charge I was requested to address the Sunday school. I attempted to make plain to the children the idea of installation. In doing so I related this anecdote: A congregation has called a new minister. His installation is announced for a certain Sunday. Coming home from church a boy who evidently has listened to the announcement very attentively, asks his father: "Father, what do they do when they install a minister? Do they put him in a stall?" "No," replies the latter. "they hitch him to a congregation and make him pull."

A little girl had evidently not seen the point in this, for when she got home she told her mother-the mother related this to me afterward-that she wanted to go to church that evening. My installation was to take place in the evening. "What for, my dear? You never go to church in the evening." "Well, but the minister said we should come, and then I want to see it. too.' "What do you want to see?" "Don't you know, mamma?" "No. What do you mean?" "Why, they are going to hitch the minister to a cart and make him pull it around the church." Homiletic Review.

Correspondence.

To the Editor: Reading the notice in last week's Enterprise of the opening of Prof. Bendix's school of music for the fall and winter season, suggested to me the idea of the formation in Arlington Mrs. Henry H. Kendall and daughters of a society for the study and practice of vocal music during the coming winter. Our good town possesses abundant talent in this divine art, and I have no hesitation in saying that such an organization would be an assured success. I was talking the other day with the talented professor named above about this very matter, and he warmly coincides with me that such a society as I suggest is the one thing required to complete the already large list of mutual benefit organizations Arlington sets afloat every fall. Prof. Bendix, I understand, has had large experience in conducting choral societies in Philadelphia, Chicago and New York, and I am prepared to say that he will be glad to meet at any time those desiring to form a musical society in Arlington.

house on the corner of all the cross roads in the state. From the date of our induction to office there would be found no illiteracy throughout the length and breadth of the state that gave birth to the "God-like Daniel." All this we thought; but, alas! "there's many a slip between cup and lip," as we found to our sorrow when it was publicly announced that the Hon. Daniel Beede of Centre Sandwich had been appointed by the governor and council of New Hampshire superintendent of public instruction. Our highest hopes for the moment were rudely dashed to earth, so that we continued on for a time thereafter "to keep school."

But we shall remember this village for other reasons. We have formed here a pleasant acquaintance in the person of Prof. Stanton, formerly a professor in Bates college. Prof. Stanton, now re tired from his profrssional work, has a most inviting home just out of the village. And then there is the village barber, who, as we sat the other day in his easy chair, went in the most delicate way for our long, tangled locks and knotted beard, so that after a little we turned our steps towards White Face, having been made over anew. Thank you, "Mr. Barber" of Centre Sandwich, for the exhibition of your professional skill upon head and face.

We must tell our readers before closing this letter of the hour we had the other evening at Mountainside Cottage in watching the stars as they first came out one by one. We had Harriet, the grandgirl of nearly five years, along with us to help us count the coming of those sparkling jewels of the heavens. Rev. Hilary Bygrave, pastor of the The first to make its appearance was ter, or what? We have neither astronomy nor Dudley Leavitt's almanac with us. And then followed that star of lesser light a little to the right of the evening star, and then came the third to the left. A long delay now came before another star sent forth its twinkling rays to this lower world of ours. So Harriet said, "Grandpa, I think God is only going to hang out three stars tonight," and then she immediately exclaimed, "O, yes, there is another bright star 'way over there; just see it, grand pa." Say what we may, then is it forever true that the children are our teachers. What a wonderful interest they take in all material objects about them and above them! And how wickedly we older grown turn them In fact, The Globe is a daily cook book for the aside from their ten thousand questionings! But to the stars. At the first, just as the twilight is coming on, they make their appearance slowly, singly and alone. But at last, when the twilight deepens, they come gracefully trooping out from their hiding-places in countless numbers, so that at last, in a moment of time, the heavens are thickset with these infinite lights of the infinite God. Harriet, in her child-like enthusiastic delight, said, "Now you "No, no, my dear girl," we replied, "we zone. As timber they are of no value, seen and unseen, well-nigh measures lessons they teach us! And what a delight to watch their coming! Although we may not liberally read them, yet be of toys. It has been found inside the it remembered that "too low they build who build beneath the stars." Harriet awoke in the morning following, saying, "O, mamma, I dreamed last night of the beautiful stars." WILSON PALMER.

BEGGING ONE'S PARDON.

We are compelled to spend so much among the cattle of the swamp lands time in begging the pardon of this one and that one for some discourtesy unintentionally shown that we lose much valuable time that might otherwise be danger of their lives. So are people devoted to the work we have in hand. unless they make smudges-that is to However prudently we may try to direct our steps, the first thing we know is that we have stepped on somebody's toes. What imperfect mortals we are! Do the very best we may, and then we come wide of the mark. Some one will more or less frequently assert that we make too free with them in our approaches. while others will assert with equal earnestness that our treatment of them is altogether too formal. So it is a penitent bow and I beg your pardon on every

Well, thanks to good fortune or some thing else, there is one thing for which we never beg anybody's pardon, and that is the make-up and character of our editorials. To talk in what seems an impersonal way gives one the full sweep of the English language. You may say your worst or best in the newspaper paragraph, and you will be let down softly, because each individual will swear that the sharp, stinging line is after the "other fellow." The individual really meant in the editorial line will not openly accept the intention of the writer, for by so doing he would plead guilty to the indictment. And yet he does know that he and no other is meant, for there are none so dull who cannot read between the lines. One of the compensations of newspaper writing is found in what the editor and reporter do not write and yet which to the obser vant reader comes with double force because left blank between the lines. Now for all this we beg nobody's pardon, while for personal, individual sayings we are constantly saying "please excuse." And we imagine that other people are much in the same awkward fix in this respect as we are.

Finders and Losers. *******************

Broadly speaking, girls are divided into two great classes-the ones who find and the ones who lose.

Meta is a girl who finds. Ownerless earrings and brooches and shirt studs are scattered along her pathway, entreating her to pick them up, whichever way she strolls, and little things like horseshoes and four leaved clovers seem to leap up in the most unlikely places at the first sound of her step.

"Guess what I found today?" is her regular form of greeting; so no one was surprised when the question came that day at Georgia's tea.

"Oh, I don't know," laid Lilian indifferently. "Probably a cotton handkerchief or somebody's other glove." Lilian is one of the girls who couldn't find anything if they would. Possibly that's the reason she assumes the man ner of one who wouldn't if she could.

Meta gave a withering glance at the scoffer. Then she removed her Ladysmith hat and extracted from its crown a roll of money, which she spread upon her lap. A $50, a $20 and a $10 bill stared out.

"Counterfeit!" gasped Lilian. "No, sir. Uncle Mac says they're as good as any ever made."

"You didn't find them, Meta; you're joking." protested Georgia. "No joke about it. I was walking down Wabash avenue, and stacks of people were passing in both directions. too, but suddenly there was an open space about a yard square right in front of me, and straight in the middle of it lay this money, all rolled up. It just seemed as though the crowd parted and everybody looked the other way on purpose to let me have it." 'Well. I never!" sang the chorus. "What are you going to use it for, Meta?" somebody asked, but Lilian, whose interest had revived wonderfully, didn't give her time to answer. "Use it for?" she cried. "Do you s'pose Meta would spend that money? Think of the poor woman who lost it!

"Woman, indeed!" retorted Meta. "Uncle Mac doesn't think that. He says there's a little pocket just inside the waist band of his trousers where he keeps a wad of bills-whenever he has one-and that it's the easiest thing in the world to slip the money in back of the pocket instead of into it. And I asked him if that ever happened to him. You ought to have seen how guilty he looked when he said, 'Once; but don't tell Ellen!' That's my aunt, you know. Well, we think-Uncle Mac and I-that some rich club fellow lost it and that he'd put it to some extravagant use even if he had it again."

"But I can't help thinking about some poor old washerwoman who old man with the two $20 goldpieces but gumlac is obtained from their infinity. These starry heavens! What hadn't another cent in the world," actually kissed my hand. Think of murmured the blue eyed innocent. "Washerwomen without another cent > are so likely to go strewing $80 rolls around!" said Meta. "More likely 'twas a schoolteacher with her month's salary. And teaching is such nervous work!" suggested Lil-"Or a fagged out woman clerk," added Georgia. "Well, I wouldn't take it from a woman any sooner than you would," declared Meta. "Of course, I wouldn't mind so much if it belonged to a man.

But I intend to advertise it anyway." "Certainly!" exclaimed Lilian, as if she'd been thinking of that all the time. "That's the proper thing to do." And blue eved innocent added. "I should just use that money for advertising every day in every paper until there wasn't a cent left." Meta pursed her lips. Well, I'm taking Uncle Mac's advice about this," she said. "He says to study the papers a day or two and see if the loser advertises. Then, after that, he says to advertise: 'Found-Sum of money, at such a place, at such a time.' Not a word to give a false claimant any help in identifying the bills, you see. But he doesn't think I'll ever find the owner, and, say, girls, if he shouldn't turn up, what do you say to a lake trip to- The ONLY place gether or some kind of a regular spree with this money?"

"I couldn't enjoy it," said the right eous Lilian.

"Not unless you gave half to a hospital." amended another. "Oh, I don't know." dissented Geor-"I think my conscience would take in a trip to Mackinac." "Good for you!" replied Meta, as she rolled up her wealth and put on her hat: "We'll spend it all for gum if we want to, Georgia, and we won't treat them, either-see if we do!"

They didn't see her again for three. weeks, and then she came flying in to luncheon at Lillan's with a look in her eves as if she'd just fallen heir to a million in gold.

"I've had the loveliest experience in the world!" she announced. "You remember that money I found? Well J waited a few days, as Uncle Mac said. and no one advertised the loss; so I put one in myself. Told them to address X, the newspaper office, you knowthe way they do. Next morning went down to get the returns. There were nine answers, and of all the pathetic things! Not one of the peopl who wrote had lost their money on the day or at the place I found mine, but they were just as hopeful, for all that, and they actually made me feel responsible for their losses.

"First there was a man who had dropped a small, flat, black book, with a pawn ticket, a laundry bill and two $2 bills in it. And distressed over it: You'd think he'd lost a gold mine. And he was so sure 'twas his money I'd found-poor fellow! Then a woman poured out a whole sheetful of her heart, and drew a picture of the purse she'd lost, and told me how the money in it belonged to her sister, who was in the hospital and who needed it dreadfully, and how I'd be blessed forever if I only restored it. Next there was an old man who had dropped two $20 bills, and he went on in a shaky, feeble hand to explain that the reason he was carrying it was because he couldn't trust the banks; and then another girl. who told about an alligator skin pocketbook containing a latchkey and a time pass over the Cincinnati, Jackson and Mackinac road. When I showed that to Uncle Mac afterward he said that road was a regular loke because it didn't run to any of the places mentioned in its name, and he just shouted over the pass, because it had expired Sept. 30, 1897. But it wasn't funny to me. I thought the girl must be in a sad way to be hanging on to an expired pass over a road like that for three whole years. Besides, she mentioned in a postscript that there was a $5 bill in her pursed

"I got awfully worked up over these letters. Then, suddenly, I had a brilliant idea. I just made up my mind to wait a week and then, if no one claim ed that $80, to send for all those forlorn people and pay them what they had lost out of what I had found. I didn't dare tell Uncle Mac the scheme until the week had passed and I had really written notifying them all to be at his office at 10 o'clock this morning. Then I just gave him the news all in one piece. I don't believe in breaking things, especially when you've set your heart on doing them.

"Oh, he thought I was crazy, of course, and wished he'd answered my 'ad.' himself and claimed the money Said he could have done it through some one else so I would never have suspected, and then could have kept the money for me until this fit of sentimental foolishness had passed off -and all that sort of talk. But the end of it was that he took a chair over by the window in his office and let me have things all my own way with the people I had sent for. They all came. mind you, and of all the surprised look ing beings! Each one was expecting to find the identical purse he had lost, and at first every one looked suspicious of every one else. They couldn't seem to grasp the situation. "I had the money all changed into the right amounts and lying in tempt ing little heaps on Uncle Mac's desk First I made a little speech and then I served gold and silver refreshments. It took every cent of the money, and had to put in a dollar besides, so there goes our gum, Georgia. But you wouldn't grudge it if you'd been there. Such larks! I never felt so much like a beneficent fairy in my life. Oh, dear, fun! Vaudevilles are nowhere. And say, the man who lost the pawn ticket will never get over his grudge against me because I couldn't give that back. He thinks I've lost him a fortune! But the rest were more than sweet. Girls. I've been blessed and hugged, and the that, will you? And the woman with the sister in the hospital was so happy And I cried. Me crying-can you see it? And Uncle Mac needn't pretend he wasn't wiping his own eyes either. But when they were gone he squared around at me, stern as stern, and said in a disgusted way:

"'Well, of all the girly girly performances!" "I looked straight back at him and just said: 'How would you have a girl. Uncle Mac, if not girly? Do you want me manny?' And, honest fact, he didn't know a single thing what to say."-Chicago Record.
